

within the silence

Edith Speers

a network of wood
beneath the roof of green
the low canopy

fingers of many tree limbs laced together
making a tent

to shelter fallen branches bent elbows of broken arms leaning stems

wood that is woven
going on and on and on
in all directions

a trap for stillness
a cage for the empty air
a web for catching silence